The Refurbishment of Radioactive Iodine Rooms Across the UK by a Patient-led Charity
Kate Farrell, Peter Thorne, Richard Black, Butterfly Thyroid Cancer Trust - Patient Charity

Background: Butterfly Thyroid Cancer Trust is the only UK patient-led charity for patients with thyroid cancer. They provide advice, information and support to people with thyroid cancer and their families. Based on its work with patients the charity identified a need to evaluate the patient experience of receiving radioactive iodine across the UK. Aims: Assess and improve the patient experience of receiving radioactive iodine. Methods: Invited 16 patients to complete a questionnaire over six weeks to evaluate their experience of receiving radioactive iodine. 100 patient responses covering 40 centres in the UK that administered radioactive iodine between 2013 and 2017 inclusive. Including an open question: "How good the experience of receiving RAI is?"

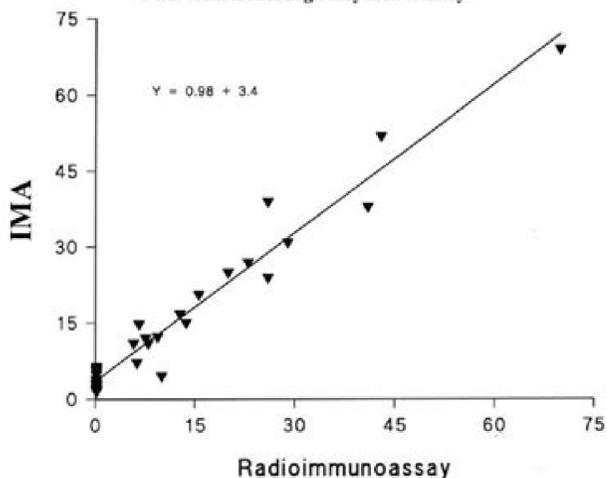

Results: 80% responses (80% female, median age of 57 yrs). Most patients were happy with the information they received (80%). Relative variations in the advice regarding the value of waiting during treatment, control after treatment, safety of the use and the need for disposal of iodine were observed. Patients identified the environment as an area for improvement. Examples of comments were: "Somehow iodine can be made safer", "Everything was covered in plastic and things that looked hard to clean because a nurse".

Patient charity led and funded improvement: Based on results of survey the charity aimed to improve radioactive iodine across the UK. 24 rooms refurbished - a further 12 approved and in progress. Approx £200k (£100k per room). Funded via charitable donations and fundraising from patients. Charities to support patients, clinicians and nurses to make it happen in each hospital.

If you're experiencing breathing difficulties, contact your doctor right away. Thyroid cancer is a condition that occurs when abnormal cells develop in your thyroid. As thyroid cancer progresses, you might experience severe neck pain that also develops in your ears. When thyroid tumors grow large enough to press against your windpipe, breathing difficulties and noisy breathing can occur. But, as the condition progresses, it can cause a variety of symptoms that you might confuse for other common illnesses and conditions. These include your blood pressure, heart rate and metabolism. If you have hoarseness due to thyroid cancer, you may also experience other vocal changes, such as changes in the pitch or tone of your voice. Swollen lymph nodes in your neck. Doctors don't understand the specific cause of the condition yet, but experts believe it may be linked to certain genes and risk factors. Early detection of potential thyroid cancer symptoms can help you get immediate treatment for the condition. Thyroid cancer can be slow-growing, and it may not cause noticeable symptoms in its initial stages. This symptom is often what causes people to seek medical attention. Vocal hoarseness from thyroid cancer isn't associated with the common cold or flu, and it doesn't cause respiratory symptoms. The most common symptom of thyroid cancer is swelling or a lump in your neck area surrounding your throat. The hormones that your thyroid gland produces help regulate several of your bodily functions. These symptoms are also associated with a host of conditions ranging from allergies to severe respiratory illnesses. Swollen lymph nodes in your neck often occur when your body is responding to an illness or infection, so it can be difficult to determine the underlying cause when you don't have other obvious symptoms. A change to your voice, including hoarseness, is another common symptom of thyroid cancer that often occurs in its later stages. Please click here to download our Guidelines Endorsement Statement.
